A: I do not see any reason for this to have been a removal request. The user had presumably installed the previous version and was apparently experiencing difficulties with it. The only reason that I can think of is that the user expected the NVR to be recognized and that the installation did not happen correctly, or alternatively that the user wanted to force the installation of the new version and that failed. The user did not supply any details for the latter case. As I am not a developer it is difficult for me to shed any light on the details of what happened. A simple version upgrade would have been enough for me to try, I guess. Orientation selectivity for the perception of speed. To reveal the mechanisms of perception of speed, we first determined whether a population of speed-related cells would respond to a sequence of moving stimuli with different speeds. Four motor sequences (one lateral, one front, one back, and one medial) with four different velocities (8, 12, 16 and 20 deg/s) were used. The sequence of three-stimulus/s was repeated eight times at each speed. The firing rate increased with the speed of the stimulus and not significantly with the sequence of the stimuli. The response pattern of speed-related cells was found to be stimulus-specific and speed-related. The response pattern changed with the velocities. It was suggested that the speed-related cells perceived the sequence of moving stimuli with a particular speed, which was affected by the speed of the stimuli. The results suggest that a cortical speed-processing mechanism exists.Q: Division by zero when using sqrt in my script My script is intended to perform simple "psychophysics" with a yes/no test. It is almost complete, except for the result-graph part. I've come to a part of the code, where I need to find the maximum. #include typedef struct Test{ double *

Glycosphingolipids (GSL) are a broad class of membrane-bound glycolipids that exhibit strong immunomodulatory and mitogenic properties. These properties appear to be largely a result of the presence of a C-Gal alpha 1-->4GalNAc (GalNAc) residue at the nonreducing terminus of the GSL. In this study, we show that mice immunized with a synthetic GalNAc-containing GSL (HS-2) produce a long-lived memory response and that these mice are protected against a challenge with the bacterial lipopolysaccharide (LPS). When mice were immunized with both HS-2 and LPS, they produced high levels of LPS-specific IgG and IgA. However, a challenge with LPS alone failed to produce LPS- 3e33713323
