The Checker nameplate had already fallen to the wayside at the end of the 1960s, and this seller states that the car is in "perfect" shape and runs and drives. The stock tachometer and gauge cluster have been replaced with a fiberglass dash, but it is otherwise fully restored. Recent service included new spark plugs, transmission, brake pads, rotors, and a radiator, clutch, and frontend suspension bushing, and no work was done to the body. The manual windows and doors open with ease, and a new undercoating and tire inflation were also performed recently. This is not a show car, but a driver! The original seat was ordered as standard equipment with the Monza and was fitted with a matching cap. As a seat option, the Australian '68 Monza seats could be ordered with plastic shims instead of the original springs and padding. This Brazilian Matching case included both seats, the original dash, and the original 1963 Ford emblem, which is shown on the deluxe "A" package on the original window stickers. The bumper is restored according to specifications, and the chrome covers are new. The engine and drivetrain are said to have been rebuilt and are said to run smooth and strong. Checker Marathon IIs were constructed in London, Ontario, by the Anticipating Automobile Co., from February 1963 through September 1966, according to the National Championship Guide. The delivery of the first Monzas occurred in April of 1963 and just four cars made it to the Canadian market. A total of 2,545 Monzas were imported from the US and Canada from June 1963 through September 1966, according to the book. Exterior photos by Joseph. Interior photos by the seller. So, d41b202975

oil giant Braskem [BRK.BRKA.BRK -0.27%]. Though Thyssenkrupp AG has always been a strategically important company for Braskem, the latter has now decided to merge its uranium operations with Sulperco, another German giant at BASF [BF.BSK -0.22%], the only other big company in the global uranium industry. The deal is reportedly worth a total of 2.4 billion euro ($2.8 billion at current exchange rates). Robert Brooks, BASF's senior vice president for mining, said earlier this week that the company could make good its bets on uranium, though the demand in the industry will depend on the price tag of new nuclear power plants and the efforts that could influence other companies in the manufacturing. "Clearly there's a big conversation going on about resumption of nuclear power plants. So what happens in the uranium market? All these things will need to be taken into account in our decision making on positioning," said Brooks. "We could be well positioned if there's a big drive for more new nuclear power." Last month, the German company won the contract from nuclear power plant operator Tennet to supply fuel for the Point Pelee plant in Ontario, owned by the Ontario Power Generation (OPG). The German firm plans to invest 874.6 million euro in the project. Brooks also said that the key to a stable uranium market lies in the ability to maintain supply once a plant is under construction. He noted that reliance on demand-driven markets encourages the firms to cut spending on research, development and new construction, with the result being lower investment and supply. "So if there's a big demand for new power plants, you need to be very well positioned. In addition to that, you also need a reliable uranium supply. So there's this bigger public conversation about the economics of nuclear power and having a good uranium supply in the market," he said. As of the first quarter, supply and demand seems to favor demand. The fuel cost index
