Technicians in Moscow are readying the Soyuz rocket for flight Thursday with a new pair of cosmonauts on board as a test crew mates conduct a long-duration mission in space. In orbit a half-world away, the U.S. Space Command will monitor the Progress cargo ship that is carrying the new crew and use satellite imagery to track the spacecraft to intercept it, confirming that it's in place before the Soyuz launches Thursday. The Soyuz spacecraft lifted off from the Baikonur Cosmodrome in Kazakhstan at 0833 GMT (3:33 a.m. EDT Thursday) Thursday and is expected to reach orbit less than two hours later. The Progress cargo ship is scheduled to dock with the International Space Station Friday to deliver nearly 5,000 pounds (2,200 kilograms) of supplies, gear and experiments for the four-person crew. The Soyuz will host a new crew this time around, three Russians and one from the United States. The duo will remain in orbit for the next six months, helping to explore experiments and conduct spacewalks. One of them, NASA astronaut Nick Hague, spoke to reporters Thursday during a pre-launch news conference at Baikonur. Hague plans to use a Russian Orlan space suit to venture outside the station on a multi-day spacewalk to replace batteries and make other adjustments for the module's solar arrays. The Progress cargo ship — a modified version of the Progress M series spacecraft — will dock with the station's port to deliver the supplies on Friday. The new crew includes three Russians and one of the first female cosmonauts to fly in space. The Soyuz rocket and capsule combination is expected to launch Thursday from Baikonur in Kazakhstan. If all goes as planned, the Soyuz
